

Abstract

---

The invention relates to a bone substitute material which comprises a soft matrix, living cells and a setting matrix. The invention also relates to processes for producing such a bone substitute material and to the use of non-ceramic hydroxyapatite cement for producing a cell-containing bone substitute material. The latter can be injected minimally invasively into a bone defect in a suitable injection apparatus relevant for the invention.